bored few young men so popular with as George Lyons, Pittsburg, Pa. The erimson of Harvard was wound jauntily about the straw hat which rested on ornate parlors of the hotel were frank in their admiration.

As he strutted about the parlors he talked about "deah old Havahd." down the stairs carrying a huge bundle the milkman began his daily rounds, should be up and logging a heavy bundle, instead of calling a "bellhop" to carry it for him

Duffy Wants to Know. So Duffy met Lyons on the stairs and asked about it. "Oh, just muh laundry, ol' man," said "just muh laundry. Found ! was making an awful clutter in muh room, so just thought I'd take it out and have it done, y'know." But Duffy didn't know. To make sure he was right, he called Detective O'Connor, and they separated Lyons from the Then they opened it. The hundle con sisted of Lyons's clean linen, his dresssuit, two pairs of shoes, and the drees suit case which he had carelessly awung into the hands of the first eager bell hop who had greeted him when he first arrived at the hotel. The next move was to make inquiries of the clerk, who informed the detec- that brought him to Canada. tives that Lyons owed the hotel 356, of which $23 was for theatre tickets. So they took Lyons before Magistrate Conner at the West Side Court.

Haryard Student? Sure. "Harvard student, hey?" inquired the Magistrate. "Yes, sir," Lyons replief.

"First year?" again asked the Magis

Again Lyons pleaded guilty.
"When did you matriculate?" was Magistrate O'Connor's next quix.
"Beg pawdon—I didn't quite get you,"

"Marriculate, I said." "Oh, yes, er-er-say, wot's dat you're springin' on me? I never heard dat spiel efore," Lyons finally explained.
"Th hold you for $500 for Special Sessions," the Court informed him, "and I think you'll have time to learn the meaning of the word 'matriculate' before you are through with this case."
